

DIFFERENT BY DESIGN

Effervescent Emma Henry is dazzling all-comers with her beguiling brand of magic by providing polish, panache and practicality to some of north London's most desirable super luxury homes.

Emma spent two years at Leeds College of Art before going on to study interior design at the world renowned KLC School of Design at Chelsea Harbour, London.

En route to a Level 5 diploma, she outshone her contemporaries to pick up the college's prestigious John Cullen Lighting Award for her final year assignment to design a town house for a leading fashion house.

Then in November 2013 came the big break, an invitation to head up the interiors team at Fusion Residential just a mile or so from her home in Radlett.

Since then, her life has been a whirlwind of activity styling everything from lighting to bespoke kitchens and bathroom layouts fit for a King and Queen.

Combinations, contrasts and a myriad of ideas for homes full of life's ultimate comforts are all-consuming in Emma's role, helping to provide that five-star lifestyle for the rich and famous.

And for Emma, interior design really is a labour of love. On her travels, she takes photographs constantly, gleaning design ideas wherever she goes.

She explained: "Unless you are obsessive over design, my photo library would be very boring for you to look through.

There is no greater feeling in my world than finding new design concepts from the most unexpected places

She is the in-house interior designer at award-winning Fusion Residential, a hotbed of ethereal and aesthetic architectural talent nestled in the tiny picture-postcard hamlet of Letchmore Heath in Hertfordshire.

Fusion Residential is shortly due to bring two exclusive new buildings to market this summer - Palazzo at Beech Hill, Hadley Wood, and The Collection in Dollis Avenue, Finchley.

The concierge-serviced apartments are modelled on Fusion Residential's passion for perfection which has won the design house numerous UK Property Awards over recent years - but Emma and the team appear to have raised the bar yet higher here, in terms of breath-taking and imaginative high-end finish.

"There is no greater feeling in my world than finding new design concepts from the most unexpected places.

Attention to detail is everything.

"I am never off duty!"

Emma is acutely aware that while people want to live in luxury they also want a home that they can feel comfortable living in. So, for her, it is the little touches and details that make rooms more homely.

"You have to add those subtle personal touches.

"At Fusion we provide a beautiful canvas onto which our homeowners can add their personal touches and create their dream home"

"I always say to our clients - buy things you love, that is the best way to bring your personality into a home." ■
